Onderzoek

de belangrijkste inzichten

- Open badges creëert motivatie
- Doelgroep gaat liever niet alleen aan de slag.
- Doelgroep leert het liefst van elkaar bij Labs
- Labs worden gebruikt als verdieping/eigen projecten
- Borden worden niet begrepen

Ontwerprichtlijnen & doel

Waar moet dit concept aan voldoen

- Het systeem moet laagdrempelig zijn
- Open badges moeten erin verwerkt worden
- Kennis delen moet mogelijk zijn
- Samenwerking moet tot stand komen
- Er moet aangemoedigd worden om elkaar te helpen
- Het systeem moet overzichtelijk zijn.
- Het systeem moet toegankelijk zijn voor zowel burgers als studenten.
- De gebruiker moet controle hebben over welke badges zichtbaar zijn
- De gebruiker zijn privacy moet gewaarborgd worden.
- Het systeem moet gebruiksvriendelijk zijn.
- Het systeem moet toepasbaar zijn voor alle labs in Rotterdam.
- Onderling contact moet gemotiveerd worden.

For evidence of the double standard, we need look no farther than Arlington, Oregon, where Mayor Carmen Kontur-Gronquist was recalled in a 142-139 vote after the town's denizens discovered that the mayor's MySpace page featured photos of her in lingerie. Although Kontur-Gronquist is alleging election fraud and challenging the returns, and even though the mayoral position was unpaid, no one is arguing that her MySpace page did her in.

Contrast her situation with that of David Paterson, New York's new governor. After Governor Eliot Spitzer resigned amid allegations of engaging the services of a prostitute, Paterson was sworn in and admitted that he had engaged in extramarital affairs and that he had experimented with both cocaine and marijuana while he was in his twenties.

It seems odd that the mayor of a small town in Oregon is being held to a higher standard than the governor of New York. With Computers, Private Can Go Public.
